Work on this project, from its inception through its production, was generously supported by research funds from St. Jerome's University in the University of Waterloo: a Faculty Research Grant, an Aid to Scholarly Publication Fund grant, Professional Development funds and Individual Internal Research Grants.

It was also supported by a Canadian Institutes of Health Research (CIHR) Operating Grant, "City Life and Well-Being: The Grey Zone of Health and Illness" (2006-2011), on which I was a co-investigator. Sincere thanks to the members of this research group, especially primary investigator Alan Blum and co-investigator Kieran Bonner.

I am indebted to Elizabeth Bernath and Alana Rigby not only for their substantial contributions to this project in their work as research assistants, but also for sharing minute fascination and exuberant love for "our" Darwin.

Elizabeth Bernath did the foundational work on the transcription of LOTP and the collation of variants, as well as much broad initial research and the initial design of the flower diagram. She also researched and created the Species Index.

Alana Rigby did foundational research and planning for the annotations, organized the page images, updated and sorted the bibliography, revised and proofed the page references in the Species Index, and made the final version of the flower diagram.

Zahra Kara aided in compiling the bibliography.

Morteza Dehghani and Tony Rosso very kindly read the final draft of the LOTP text and notes.

Words of wise and encouraging advice from Alan Bewell influenced the Introduction.

I am extremely grateful to the kindred spirit who was the Romantic Circles peer reviewer, for their incomparable knowledge, understanding, and attentiveness in responding to the project, and their most supportive constructive criticism.

I also want to offer thanks as extensive as the edition itself to Jessica Tebo for producing the volume as a digital edition.

There are many librarians to whom I owe many thanks:

Assistant Librarian Jeannette McDevitt and Bibliographer Donald Brown of the Hunt Institute for Botanical Documentation at Carnegie Mellon University for assistance with a query about the Linnaean dissertations (Amœnitates Academicæ).

Casey Machenheimer, Reference Assistant, and Kristina Krasny, Research and Teaching Coordinator at the Lilly Library, Indiana University Bloomington, for their kind assistance with the digitization of images from LOTP 1789.

Jessica Blackwell, Librarian, Special Collections and Archives, University of Waterloo, for her friendliness and efficiency whenever I wanted to consult items in the collection, and her generosity in digitizing images from LOTP 1799.

Mary Hague-Yearl, Head Librarian, and Bozena Latincic, Senior Documentation Technician, at the Osler Library of the History of Medicine, McGill University, for kindly and warmly accommodating me and my requests on my research visit.

Jennifer Garland, Interim Head Librarian, and Octavian Sopt, Senior Documentation Technician, Rare Books and Special Collections, McGill University Library, for welcoming me, retrieving my large number of requests over a short time, and digitizing the LOTP 1791 Frontispiece.

Bridget Whittle, Archives Assistant, The William Ready Division of Archives and Research Collections, Mills Memorial Library, McMaster University, for assistance with accessing and examining the copies of The Botanic Garden in their collection, and above all for her very generous efforts in providing all of the facsimiles of the main text of this edition, LOTP 1790.

I very much appreciate the support for my work and listening ears for my Erasmus Darwin obsession, over quite a long period of time, from Ken Robinson; Gaiyle, Robert, and Cal Connolly; Steve Clark; Kimiyo Ogawa; Helen Bruder; and K. V. Johansen.
